Are teams really so terrific? – On the benefits and pitfalls of team work

Team work has become increasingly important in recent years. Employers look for "team players" in job advertisements. Children are trained to become team players already at school.

However, are teams really that terrific? What aspects should you consider in putting together and co-ordinating teams? What is the effect of time on team development? What group dynamics need taking into account? Does it make more sense to work individually on certain tasks rather than as a team?

Target group: Everybody who wants to know how teams actually work – whether in paid work, clubs or voluntary work. The course is hands-on and based on empirical findings in social psychology.
